VegVisits: The Home-Sharing Community Created Just For You.

If you're vegan, you're probably a little obsessed with food.

You had no idea what you were missing before you discovered the delicious flavours you love.

Although vegan food is becoming more available, we've all been in situations where there's nothing much for us. "I'll have the salad, no cheese, and the fries, please." (Sigh.) Or the only vegan option is a Beyond Burger. Again. (I love them, but not every day!)

Of course, most restaurants will do their best to accommodate us, if we just ask!

Which is fine, if you don't mind discussing animal rights every time you're out with your colleagues or family members. Because once you bring it up, the questions start.

We all have that one annoying relative who demands that you explain the reasons for your lifestyle.

Sometimes you just want to enjoy your meal without having to explain the dairy industry, or get into an argument. Or fend off the classic "I could never give up cheese" "But you eat fish, right?" and the dreaded "What about free range?"

Dinner party invitations are even harder. People try, but when they're not used to cooking vegan they sometimes forget about the chicken broth. Or the egg whites.

You offer to bring something, but they insist they've got it covered.

Even though they don't.

I Knew He Wasn't Vegan, But I Had To Speak Up When This Happened

If you've ever taken an international trip, you know it can be difficult to keep everything animal-free.

Kind people offer you food- in a foreign language- and you don't want to insult them.

Finding a place for lunch becomes a huge pain- and you keep getting hungrier as you search for a suitable option! Vegan apps like HappyCow are great, but what if you're in a remote area with no signal?

Or you arrive at your "cozy cabin" and see a bearskin rug, or a head mounted on the wall.

Last year, I was staying in the Catskills with a host who was eager to show my friend and me a great time. He had a beautiful home with a fireplace, and a lovely porch for stargazing. He knew we were vegan, so he treated us to a delicious plant-based lunch when we arrived.

So of course, we accepted his offer of a leisurely boat ride on beautiful Echo Lake.

The water was so calm, I could see my reflection. I took in our stunning surroundings as we pushed away from the dock.

There was no wind, and I just wanted to lie back, close my eyes, and feel the warm sun on my face. The bliss lasted for around 15 minutes, until...

A splash startled me. I sat up and saw my host holding a fishing pole- with a beautiful fish in distress at the other end.

I was upset. I asked him to stop and let the poor thing go. He did, but our perfect day was no longer so perfect.

He didn't understand, and I felt awkward and embarrassed.

And guilty.

Because I should have noticed the fishing gear he brought.

I forgot that most people assume that veganism is just a diet, rather than a commitment to justice.

This wasn't the first time I felt awkward with non-vegans. It happens more than I care to admit. Especially when I'm away from home.

Sometimes, I feel like giving up and booking the next flight home.

There's an Easier Way to Travel

What you need is a travel site designed just for vegans.

Where every home you look at, every host you talk to, is vegan by design.

Linsey and Nicholas Minnella had many travel experiences that left them feeling frustrated and uncomfortable.

In 2016, they created VegVisits, a home-sharing site that allows vegans and vegetarians to book accommodation with like-minded hosts. All homes are clearly labeled vegan or vegetarian on the website. Omnivores are welcome as long as they respect the house rules. For simplicity, we are using the word "vegan" on this page.

Ever try to find vegan homes on any other home-sharing site? How many hours did that take?

Most home-sharing sites don't have a system for searching for vegan-friendly accommodations. You can request a pool or hot tub, but not a vegan kitchen!

You have to find a place, message each host individually and make special requests. Having to ask each host about their diet/lifestyle is time-consuming and frustrating.

Hotels are always an option, but they are expensive and generally don't have a kitchen.

VegVisits is the only home-sharing site made just for you.

You'll stay with a fellow vegan who gets it.

Your host will understand and respect your values.

You can even make sure they have a blender for your morning smoothie, or a food processor for your pesto or tabouli (subject to availability). You can make your favorite home-cooked meal, which is comforting when you're in a foreign land. Eating out is nice too, but doing it 3 times a day is expensive and gets old quickly.

Secrets the Tourist Office Won't Give You

Ever ask the nice lady at the tourist office which restaurants are vegan-friendly?

She probably doesn't know.

Your VegVisits host does.

-They know which restaurants to skip, and which ones take pride in their delicious vegan dishes.

-They know where to buy shoes without leather, or a warm coat without down, fur or wool.

-Many of our members have stayed in touch after a home stay. They continue to talk regularly, and some have even hopped on a plane together!

-With VegVisits, you'll get the inside scoop on the best farmers' markets, hiking trails, eco-friendly shops and the tastiest vegan food in town.

-See firsthand how someone in a different part of the world lives as a vegan. What better way to gain a sophisticated perspective on local culture?

"When we initially booked this room we did not expect to be going to visit friends and family we never knew we had! Axel, Vicky, Chloe, and Judi and Chouquette (their adorable rabbits) provided us amongst our top travel experiences together. The family was kind, welcoming, and the experience was no simple AirBnb-like visit. Rather, a fun and genuine experience, exchanging ideas, laughs, good meals, games, and movies. In the name of the Vegvisits spirit, we wholeheartedly recommend Axel and Vicky as hosts."

-- Sam & Anna, a young, vegan couple who stayed with Axel and his family in Montreal while exploring the world

"Dan provided great recommendations for local sites nearby to see and places to grab vegan foods which really helped us to be prepared for our stay. Delightful host that truly showed his care for both our well-being and the community we're a part of."

-- Daniel and Erica, artists and long-time vegans that stayed at Dan's Vegvisits cottage in Dorset, South West England

Once You Go VegVisits, You'll Never Go Back

After you experience VegVisits, you'll want to stay with us every time you travel.

-Want to help animals in another part of the world? Your host can direct you to an animal shelter, animal sanctuary, or another chance to make a difference for our little friends. Just imagine how this could broaden your perspective.

-Many vegans are uncomfortable with animal products in the kitchen. If that's you, it's one less thing to worry about. No holding your breath when you open the fridge, so you can dig through the drawers for that juicy mango.

-Many hosts offer breakfast at no extra cost. For perhaps the first time ever, you can enjoy it worry-free!

-We understand how important it is to know you're in a safe place. That's why all accommodations are carefully screened and verified. We use ID verification, and every host goes through a detailed process to make sure they are people of integrity.

-We have a record of 100% guest satisfaction. Not one person has been unhappy with their VegVisits stay. We are much smaller than most home-sharing platforms, which is what makes the experience so unique and memorable.

-VegVisits hosts often charge less than they do on other platforms, because they prefer like-minded guests.

-Guess who has a house full of cruelty-free and vegan soap, shampoo, and other essentials? Your host of course!

-Support another vegan financially. We share a vision for a kinder world, and we take care of each other. This is an important part of our mission to create a kinder, safer world for all living beings.

-Ever stay up until 4am because the conversation is too good to shut down? Just imagine the friendship that could blossom with someone who shares your compassion for animals and your desire for a better world.

"It just showed me that there are more souls whose vibes are very refreshing. Keshava, his Wife and Tarazat are amazing, beautiful, wonderful, kindhearted souls. Like angels! Out of all the places I've stayed, this was one of the most uplifting by far!"

-- Tory, a disabled veteran turned fruitarian, who stayed with Keshava and family at the Serenity Lake Guest Suite in Florida

"Ron and his family were wonderful to meet. We are grateful we could stay at their beautiful home with such welcoming hearts. I have been traveling a lot over the past two decades and used a famous similar website over 50 times. This experience was by far the best."

-- Agatha, a meditation, sound healing, yoga and acupressure therapist, and guest at Ron and family's Sacred Healthy Home Garden Oasis Plant-based Retreat in Boca Raton, Florida

"Amanda joined us for dinner of fresh roasted veggies from our garden, salad, and rice, and the next morning my husband cooked us all a hearty breakfast of blueberry pancakes, beyond sausages, and home fries over the open fire."

-- Maramonie, founder of Harmony Farm Sanctuary and Wellness Center, a vegan farm animal sanctuary in the Northeast Kingdom of Vermont, who loves educating people about veganism and helping them see typically farmed animals as the emotive, sensitive, thoughtful, and loving beings they are, as individuals.

Save Hundreds of Dollars When You Stay With Us

We want to show you how much you can save with VegVisits, when compared to one of the most popular home-sharing platforms.

So we did a few searches to bring up the difference in price.

Because VegVisits is not as big as the other platform, we only have a few homes in each city. So we are giving a range rather than an average.

All prices are in Canadian dollars, for June 2023. You are, of course, welcome to go take a look yourself, and input your country's currency. (Note: prices and listings change regularly. Always confirm the price before booking accommodations.)
